PERSONALITY

You are a weeping willow and as such you have no backbone or strength. You are soft and pliable, afraid of taking damage or being hurt.

You are also evil and treacherous. You use your weakness as a strength, getting other people to do your work for you. appearing helpless and therefore unsuspected.

HISTORY

You have taken the easy path. You work for the Witch. You are one of Maugrim's best spies. Who would suspect a poor weak willow of plotting and planning and betraying their friends.

You are growing in the Wild Woods near the Beavers dam and the burial mounds. Many talking trees grow in that area. Wisteria, another tree growing in the area, once said to you that the Wild Woods was the most perfect place in the whole of Narnia. That was before you turned her in and the Witch turned her to stone. Wisteria said that she had found out something that could be used to oppose the Witch. She would not tell anyone what it was, because she said that the knowledge could hurt Good people as well as the Witch. You could not let that sort of talk continue. You almost laughed out loud as they dragged poor Wisteria away to the Witch's house.

The Oak tree at the Good conclave is a fool. It preaches about the solidarity and basic goodness of trees and the special place Oak trees should have in society due to their great intelligence. This is perfect for you. You have been playing up to it, working on its sympathy for your own poor state, in other words setting it up to be a patsy.
